Sweden should take a stance for Israel

The Swedish government should take a stance for Israel and give her its support. The Israeli attack on Lebanon is nothing else than a defensive war against terrorist in Hizbollah and Hamas. When Palestinians kidnap Israeli soldiers and Hizbollah attacks army posts on Israeli soil it is clear that Israel should have the right to defend it self according the principle of self defense.

This is also supported but the professor of international law, Ove Bring, former deputy general secretary in the UN Hans Corell.

Israel is the only democratic state in its area and should receive full backing from other democratic state in the West. It is a shame that the social democratic government in Sweden, with the foreign minister Jan Eliasson taking the lead, criticizes Israels self defense. But I am not surprised since the social democrats has given its unreserved support to Palestinian terrorists for decades and is now backing Islamic organizations in Sweden through its "Brotherhood"-movement.

Hamas and Hizbollah are terrorist organizations and in Lebanon the Lebanese government has let Hizbollah act with impunity and allowed them to carry out terrorist attacks again Israel. Tragically the Swedish socialist government has a hard time understanding how it is to live with such a situation, a situation that the Israeli citizen lives with every day.
